

Duxbury student art on display at State House

Art from Duxbury High School students is now on display in the historic Doric Hall at the Massachusetts State House in Boston.

This third annual "Sixth Plymouth District Student Art Show" showcases art in categories of photography, painting, drawing and pastels and mixed media and also includes students from Pembroke and Hanson and Whitman. This year's competition included more than 60 entries.

A panel of local judges reviewed the works and will award prizes for each category and best in show. Awards will be announced later this week. The exhibit runs through Friday, November 27 and is open to for public viewing during regular State House hours.

Two examples of local students' art hang in the State House.